

"Landscape is subject to a constant change caused by both natural forces and man's intervention. This complex phenomenon forms the playground of many disciplines that irregularly form alliances whilst in other occasions become each others rivals. Landscapes are the foci for complex knowledge-action interactions, knowledge claims, emotions, dogmas and conflicts between disciplines."

"European countries are characterized by valuable cultural landscapes that have gradually evolved for many years, their survival being protected by traditional ways of land use. As the traditional forms of land use have changed, these valuable cultural landscapes are threatened and in places are facing extinction. Therefore, an interdisciplinary approach to cultural landscapes is an opportunity to preserve and protect them."
